

The Quiet Keeper of Two Harbors

— Clue 1

Inside the dusty visitor center, you meet a quiet older man—the lone caretaker of the shop. His clothes are sun-bleached, his beard untrimmed, and his voice dry from solitude. He's lived on the island longer than he can remember.

He's kind, but a bit odd. He tells you he hasn't seen visitors in weeks—months, maybe. You ask if there's any way to call for help. He shakes his head.

“No radios. No lines. No boats. Not since my family abandoned me...”

He mentions that a ways off, tucked behind the ghost town, is the old Catalina Harbor —a forgotten Navy outpost from the war. Not much left now except some wreckage, rusted crates, and the old pier. He says:

“They used to bring in signal gear and supplies down there. You might find something... useful.”

As he speaks, he pulls a mesh of papers from under the counter—something left behind long ago. Inside is a folded map fragment , and a photograph.

The shopkeeper tells you these are some remains from when the Navy used to land here. “Here's an old picture of the landing dock at the harbor. If you need communication supplies,” he says, “you can look around here.”

You take his advice and exit the shop after saying your farewells.

Your Objective:

Identify the location in the photograph using the old map of the harbor, then head to that location to open clue 2.

Note: Ensure you're done with everything Two Harbors (gear drop, food, rentals, etc.) before embarking on your journey.
