

Summit Lake

— Clue 3

The lake is quiet—almost too quiet. Ringed by dusty brush and windswept hills, it feels like time has forgotten this place. As you approach, you notice something curious: scattered around the shore lie rusted tin cans, faded cigarette boxes, and the remains of old ration kits—litter frozen in time. It seems this quiet basin was once a place for off-duty soldiers to rest, swap stories, maybe even feel human again amid the rigid routine of wartime.

The silence here is different. Less eerie, more reflective. Like the island is holding its breath.

Scattered throughout the litter are items that catch your eye—old photographs and weathered letters. Carefully, you pick them up and examine each one. They're all personal—snapshots of soldiers, the landscape, and a few group shots in front of military vehicles.

Furthermore, tucked beneath a rocky overhang on the northern shore, half-buried in dust and dry grass, you spot a weather-worn satchel stamped with a U.S. Navy emblem. The leather is cracked, the buckle rusted—but it opens with a snap.

Inside the satchel: a folded note. The paper is stained and brittle, but the writing—scrawled in pencil—is still legible. It looks like a message passed from one soldier to the next, maybe passed in secret or in haste.

The note appears to give directions to this very lake. Whatever this place meant to them, it clearly wasn't random. Then, near the bottom of the page, one line stands out—simple, coded, and just specific enough to guide you:

"To reach Summit Lake from Camp Sharkfin, head north on the road toward Two Harbors, away from the shore. Stop after you have reached the number of miles as Chadwick has kids."

Perhaps you can use this clue to find the location of old Camp Sharkfin .

If the lake held answers, the camp may still hold something more.

Maybe even the communication equipment you so desperately need.

But the sun is dropping fast.

Your Objective:

Use all your gathered information to piece together the clue. Go to Camp Sharkfin then open clue 4.
